Association of Certified Professional Managers

ABOUT US

Managers of today work in an era of constant change. Increasing competitive pressures, rapid developments in Information Technology, Tele communications, and a more demanding society altogether pose challenges crying out for effective solutions. Organisations today therefore need to have skilled Managers who can address these demanding challenges and have the ability to develop and implement the most effective business strategies to solve these problems.

The Association of Certified Professional Managers (ACPM) was established in the United Kingdom by a group of highly successful business executives to offer a professional management programme for working executives who need a professional qualification other than an academic BBA or MBA. The ACPM is an International Licensing and Regulatory Professional body formed for the purpose of providing practicing managers with the opportunity to participate and to be part of the process of improving managerial performance and effectiveness in all areas of business and industrial activity.

The objective of ACPM's Certified Professional Managers programme is to provide working managers an opportunity to obtain professional qualifications and enhance their abilities to become more effective managers. ACPM also support and promote professionalism in the manner managers conduct themselves when dealing with people and organisations in the business and work environment. Through our membership and certified scheme we also ensure that our members uphold the high standards of management skills and expertise required by all employers in all sectors of economic activity.

WHY SEEK CPM CERTIFICATION

Everyone knows that MBBS following an individual's name indicates a medical doctor and CPA signifies the individual has met requirements of a certified public accountant. Thousands of industries utilize lesser known professional certifications to recognise individuals for their competency in a chosen career field as assessed by their ability to perform to a set of standards. Ask a certified professional, "Why?" and they'll tell you that the certification process is one of the single most important steps you can make in your career development. Here are several reasons why to pursue professional certification:

1. Certification demonstrates commitment. Certification demonstrates to peers, business associates, and the general public one's commitment to a profession. University degrees no longer represent the full measure of knowledge in today's rapidly evolving workplace. Instead, certification serves to distinguish professionals as leaders in their fields.
2. Certification enhances a profession's image. Certification grows, promotes, and develops professionals who stand out in an industry. They are publicly recognised by their professional credentials, i.e. CFA, CLU, CPM, etc. Organizations that invest in certified professionals gain an advantage over the competition by employing the best and the brightest.
3. Certification reflects achievement. Certified professionals make the effort to improve themselves both professionally and personally. An impartial, third-party certifies that a set level of knowledge and skills have been attained. This achievement is evidence of a pursuit for excellence and the ability to meet standards and requirements.
4. Certification builds self-esteem. Certification programs set standards for performance, ethics, and continuing professional development (through recertification). Certified professionals control their own destiny and possess a deep sense of personal satisfaction.
5. Certification improves career opportunities and advancement. Certification provides an "edge" when being considered for a promotion or key assignment. Certification distinguishes professionals in the decision making process.
6. Certification leads to greater on-the-job responsibilities. Since certification is voluntary, it indicates one's willingness to invest in their own professional development. Certified professionals are aware of the changing environment surrounding their profession and possess the tools to anticipate and respond to change.
7. Certification yields professional recognition. Certified professionals receive increased recognition from peers and business associates for earning certification credentials. Recertification makes certification a lifelong activity that continues to pay off beyond the initial investment.
